"The way to prevent these irregular interpositions of the people is to give them full information of their affairs thro' the channel of the public papers, & to contrive that those papers should penetrate the whole mass of the people.
The basis of our governments being the opinion of the people, the very first object should be to keep that right;
and were it left to me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government,
I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter.
But I should mean that every man should receive those papers & be capable of reading them."

McSally bill may exempt Border Patrol from freedom of information laws

Two months after a set of public records was requested, Pima County Supervisor Ally Miller has decided and traded down on demonstrably false claims about public business. Despite her admission, Miller has maintained timing and other factors — putting her in violation of existing laws or risk of a lawsuit.

Errors in McSally campaign reports add up to millions

U.S. Rep. Martha McSally has raised a sizable war chest for 2016 — but nowhere near as big as what she has just claimed.

Filings by McSally just don't add up. They have included a pattern of overstating her fundraising, with her latest report showing an apparently phantom total that is $3.3 million more than her actual campaign haul. Federal regulators have repeatedly knocked the Republican's campaign for errors and incomplete reports.

Board votes to expedite release; Miller flouted legal advice with demands

Forced to acknowledge that she has no relevant records of public business she conducted for her personal accounts, Supervisor Ally Miller quickly left the County Board of Supervisors meeting Tuesday, even as officials continued to discuss her month-long unwillingness of replying questions about ex-staffer Timothy Odejar's charges she once worked with a racketeer.

The Board voted to file Miller's request for records under the state's open records law, which requires agencies to respond to requests for records — some of which were made more than four weeks ago. The Board also stated that any records not corresponding with the subject of the request would be "scrubbed" in accordance with the supervisor's capacity — which would mean that the deep pockets of the county would not back their legal defense.

The Supervisors also voted to release a June 9 confidential opinion from the Pima County Attorney's Office that informed the District 1 Republican that her legal counsel was at fault for her insistence on charging thousands of dollars for paper copies instead of complying with requests for electronic Federal prosecutors asked for, and were granted, a protective order sealing evidence collected in the murder trial of a Border Patrol agent indicted for the 2012 cross-border shooting that killed a Mexican teenager in Nogales.

As part of the request, lawyers representing the U.S. government confirmed that prosecutors have at least two videos of the incident, in which Border Patrol Agent Lorraine Swartz shot through the border fence and killed 16-year-old Jose Elena Rodriguez on Oct. 10, 2012.

Swartz was indicted in September by a grand jury, and charged with second-degree murder.

Running down the numbers

The county property taxes of your tax bill funds daily government operations for 26 years. The state some of the subsidy has been shifted to local governments this year. In Pima County, the net effect continues to homeowners are only on the hook for primary property taxes as added up, when all non-primary properties have been added up. In私人地產, the non-primary properties will pick up the extra tab — but those who live in TUSD won't.
